"But for this one anxiety," said a worrled-looking woman, "I should be very happy and cheerful. I cannot be blamed for feeling as I do about that matter."

Yet when taken out of the morbid setting of her mind and placed beside the real sorrows and tragedies of life her anxiety was a petty and trivial affair, and she was obliged to confess managed to endure otherwise insupportable conditions, and long afterward the vibrations her persistent thoughts set in motion brought tenfold more happiness into her life than she had imagined.

Believe yourself been to good luck; time will justify your idea if you continue to believe it, even in the face of disaster and misfortune.

Fate qualis before colossal optimism, and drops the treasures she has been withholding into outsiretched hands.

But if your hands are covering your weeping eyes she passes you by without a comforting word or a gift. She has no symputhy for the fearful; only admiration for the brave.

Practice Mental Gymnastics.

Do not walt for things to shape themselves to your liking before you enjoy your life.

People who do that find happiness impossible when all their dreams come true, because they have deformed their minds by despondent and discontented methods of thinking.

Practice mental gymnastics every day, and scarch for something to be happy and thankful for. It is an interesting experiment, and one which will ropay you.

That it can be done successfully, under the mest adverse circumstances, I know.
